President's Message—from Donna Brau

There are many famous women in history - the list of early "leaders" includes

Cleopatra: Queen of Egypt at the age of 18

Joan of Arc: helped the French defeat the English and was later burned at the stake

Queen Elizabeth I: great queen of England

Pocahontas: saved Captain John Smith's life

Abigail Adams: President's wife and supporter of women's rights

Betsy Ross: famous seamstress

Deborah Sampson: fought in the Revolutionary War, pretending to be a man

Sacagawea: famous guide and interpreter for Lewis & Clark

Sojourner Truth: African American woman who spoke out against slavery and for the rights of women

Elizabeth Cady Stanton: leader in the women's rights movement

Lucy Stone: first woman in the US to earn a college degree in 1847, organized the first national women's rights convention

Susan B. Anthony: formed the National Woman's Suffrage Association

Elizabeth Blackwell: first woman physician

Emily Dickenson, Louisa May Alcott, Mary Cassatt, Edmonia Lewis: famous poet, author, painter, sculptor

Charlotte E. Ray: first African American woman to get a law degree

Juliette Gordon Low: founded the American Girl Scouts

Marie Currie: famous scientist and Nobel prize winner

Maria Montessori: famous for her work with young children and education and

Helen Keller, Georgia O'Keefe, Amelia Earhart, Margaret Mead, Mother Teresa, Rosa Parks, Coretta Scott King, Anne Frank, Jane Goodall, Madeleine Ahlbright, Jane Fonda, Wilma Rudolph, Billy Jean King, Hillary Rodham Clinton, Oprah Winfrey

Look over this list (realizing that it is a very minimal and inconclusive list of possibilities) and contemplate the following: What did these women, who lived a thousand years apart, have in common? Why were they stand-outs, leaders? I tend to believe that there is some common ground here, something more than 'birth right' and I also tend to believe that over the centuries that given more 1) Opportunity 2) Education and 3) Positive reinforcement that our list of influential women would be so long that I couldn't have even begun to scratch the surface of names. In reality, my Google search for famous women led to several rather non-overwhelming lists that consistently listed these names. As the decades became more contemporary, the list grew to include an odd imbalance of actresses, singers, and "E" news personalities.

WILLMAR AREA CHAPTER – MN BUSINESS WOMEN

If you do the same Google search looking instead for famous men in history, the lists are exhaustive, and balanced in those lists are an impressive number of statesmen, politicians, physicians, artists, performers, scientists, physicists, psychologists, explorers ...

Leaders Of All Kinds.

A couple months ago I wrote about Sheryl Sandberg, author of Lean In. She is concerned because “too many people hold themselves back because they feel intimidated.” She focuses on the financial disparity between men and women, and the imbalance between the fact that women make up 51% of the population, but only 4% of CEO positions. Where does this disparity begin?

I would opt to say that little girls are introduced to this disparity at a very young age through experiences at home, in school, and through the media. They are bombarded on a daily basis with messages that focus on how we should look, how we should move, how we should dress, and how important it is to maintain our youth. What do we tell our girls, and more importantly, how do we convince our girls, that media focus on the Miley Cyrus debacle is offensive and should not be tolerated? I think we have more important things to do than watch, talk about, and acknowledge such a display, and we deserve the opportunity, the education, and the positive support to do and be all that we can be. Until we change the focus of the media and of society about where we belong and what we can do, then we, as a society, will continue to waste the creative, innovative, trustworthy, quality leadership potential of half of the world's population!

As a new school year begins, make a vow to be a part of a growing need to be involved in the education of our youth, whether at home, at school, or in the media. Our schools can't do this incredibly difficult job alone, especially when pitted against the glitz of video and media. Volunteer in the schools if you can, get involved with Career Fairs/Days, contribute any way you can, and at the very least be an advocate for children – children who deserve and require the best we all have to offer. They are, after all, our future...

Mentoring

August is the traditional “Back to School” shopping event for the mentors and their girls. Some of the funds that are raised at our Spring fundraiser are used to get the girls ready for the new school year. The mentors have all taken their girls out shopping for school supplies, shoes and possibly a new outfit for the first day of school. We have three of our girls that are starting out at the Sr. High School this year. It’s hard to believe they’re getting that old. In September the group is planning on going horseback riding. This will be a first for the mentoring group. We’re hoping for a gorgeous fall day.

Alayna excited about finding the perfect shoes for school

Social Security

Seventy-eight years ago, on August 14 1935, President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed the bill that created Social Security into law. And yet, some in Washington are still obsessed with undermining this foundation of retirement security in America.

Nobel-prize winning economist Paul Krugman wrote, “Conservatives hate Social Security for ideological reasons. Its success undermines their claim that government is always the problem, never the solution. But they receive crucial support from Washington insiders, for whom a declared willingness to cut Social Security has long served as a badge of fiscal seriousness, never mind the arithmetic.”

While Social Security is a program that is vitally important to all Americans, it is especially critical to the financial security of women. There are a number of reasons why this is so.

The Broken Water Ceiling?

You’ve heard of the glass ceiling. Maybe even the lavender ceiling. But what about the broken-water ceiling?

[A couple of weeks ago], New York City Council candidate Raquel Batista gave birth to a baby girl—making Batista one of only a small handful of women to run for public office while pregnant, let alone (as Batista hopes) to win. Yet throughout the gestation of her political run, Batista has been dogged by questions—and doubts—surrounding her pregnancy.

Earlier in August, at a debate featuring Batista and other candidates in the Bronx council district, a local newspaper wrote:

Looking only slightly uncomfortable at almost nine months pregnant, Raquel Batista, the former housing and immigration rights activist, somehow managed to hang in there for the full two hours.

In fact, that was the only mention of Batista—even though, as a lawyer, former Executive Director of the Northern Manhattan Coalition for Immigrant Rights and former community organizer with the Northwest Bronx Community and Clergy Coalition, Batista is arguably the most well-known and qualified candidate in the race. And she arguably would be seen as such, were she not female and pregnant.

Following the birth of her daughter, one of Batista’s opponents, Joel R. Rivera, supposedly congratulated Batista, saying, “I hope she’s able to have the time-management skills to be there for her child and run her campaign.” It’s hard to imagine a new father facing such barbs running for office.
